OAK WILT CAN BE PARTIALLY CONTROLLED

Oak wilt, a disease which has spurred increasing numbers of questions in Virginia, can be at least partially controlled, S. B. Fenne, plant pathologist at VPI, says control measures have not been worked out satisfactorily, but he does suggest the following measures:

Promptly cut and destroy, treat or use infected trees. When practical, destroy diseased trees by burning. Otherwise, trees should be debarked or split into small pieces which will dry rapidly. If diseased trees are sawed into lumber the slabs should be burned. Logs which are to be sawed or pulped should be used promptly, not stacked in a yard. Timbers which may be used for ties, posts, or pit props, should be treated with a preservative. Logs that must be left in the woods or stored indefinitely in wards should be sprayed.

Oak or related trees within 50 feet of a diseased tree should be removed or poisoned. Make a frill-cut around the entire circumference of the trunk, and treat with ammate. Trees less than 2 inches in diameter can be killed by a basal spray or a weed killer. The reason for poisoning trees close to infected ones is to prevent spread of the disease through root grafts.

Cut all diseased trees as low as possible, and peel the stump. In addition, treat the stump with ammate.

Fenne said all woodland operators are being asked to fell and skid trees in such a way as to avoid barking remaining trees. Any opening in the bark may lead to infection. Shade trees should not be pruned during the spring and early summer when there is a lot of sap flow. All pruning wounds should be treated with a suitable tree paint.

'The Common Glory' to Open Eighth Season at Williamsburg

Williamsburg, June 23.- Seven years old, yet virtually new, "The Common Glory," Paul Green's drama of Thomas Jefferson's Revolutionary War years, will open its eighth season next Wednesday, June 30, at beautiful Matoaka Lake Amphitheatre here.

With an array of features which officials say will convert the long-run hit production into almost a new play, the drama will be opened officially in impressive ceremonies in which Virginia's Governor Thomas B. Stanley will be the central figure.

Governor Stanley's appearance on the stage prior to opening curtain time will be in his dual role of head of the Commonwealth, which is co-sponsor with the Jamestown Corporation of the patriotic drama, and honorary president of the Corporation itself.

The evening ceremonies will be opened by a concert of the Virginia high school band clinic, which will be winding up its annual session at the College of William and Mary. The concert will begin at 7:30 P. M., and Governor Stanley will be introduced by the Jamestown Corporation's President, Lewis A. McMurran at 8:00 P. M.

The curtain will go up on the eighth season's edition of "The Common Glory" at 8:15, and Corporation officials have pointed out that these are some of the things which will be revealed for the first time this year.

A 16-piece "little symphony" orchestra which director Howard Scammon says has added "wonderful depth and color" to the already successful drama.

A complete musical score, including new overtures and other music composed by the brilliant young Virginian composer, Hampton's Harold Chapman.

An integrated use not only of the orchestra but also of individual and small groups of musicians in scenes in which, during past seasons sound has been "dubbed in" over a sound track.

Scores of new costumes, designed by Suzanne Sherman and made by the drama's own costume crew.

New scenery units in many scenes lighted by mammoth follow "spots" which will be put into use this year for the first time.

Far from least, a second act so thoroughly reworked as to be almost completely new in its treatment of the same basic thesis .. Jefferson's belief in the dignity of the individual man.

But with all the new features, Mr. Scammon said, will be many old ones: Thomas Jefferson will be played this year by Layton Zimmer, who was so successful in the role in 1953. David Friedman will be back once more in the comedy part of Cephus Sicklemore in which he convulsed audiences in 1952, and Anne Helms, who plays opposite Friedman as the Widow Huzzitt, will be portraying that character for the third successive year.

Although refined and greatly improved, the principle of the modern cotton gin is basically the same as that developed by Eli Whitney in 1793.

Cotton supplies cellulose for the production of chemicals, plastics and explosives.

Mellorine, a new frozen dessert containing cottonseed oil, is fast climbing in popularity.
